Not just one of the finest historically black institutions, not just one of the finest Southern institutions, but one of the finest colleges and universities of any kind, anywhere in the country.”

6 STRATEGIC GOALS

30 THE JOURNEY CONTINUES
With the overwhelming success of The Campaign for a New Century, we’ve earned the right to use words that carry weight—like ambition, success and, most of all, impact.

A VISION—bold, clear and relevant—is often a catalyst for change. Nowhere is this more true than the vision that Walter E. Massey ’58 had for Morehouse College: “to be one of the finest liberal arts colleges in the nation—period.” President Massey envisioned an academic village, a place that reflects the intellectual, spiritual and moral character of its inhabitants. Its creation is key to the College’s ability to provide our students with an education that makes them viable in the new century.

The Campaign for a New Century is the juncture where the College’s mission intersects with the cost of building the academic village.

The Campaign’s $105.7-million goal was the most ambitious in the history of Morehouse. Not only was the goal twice the amount of the College’s last campaign, but the Campaign occurred at a time when a weak economy forecasted a drop in philanthropic giving.

But a clear vision and strong leadership made the Campaign the most successful fundraising venture in the College’s history.

Led by the Morehouse College Board of Trustees, the Campaign for a New Century, which began July 1, 1997, and met and exceeded the goal a full year before its official end on June 30, 2006, proved to be a lesson in mastering possibilities. As Phillip D. Howard ’87, vice president for Institutional Advancement, said at the onset of the Campaign, the challenge would not be in generating opportunity—but in seizing it.

Of all the Campaign’s constituencies, Morehouse alumni are the most vested. Morehouse is not only an important part of their past and a large contributor to who they are today, but, for many, the College also will be a part of their future as they encourage sons and grandsons, nephews and neighbors to attend the institution they love. It’s not surprising, then, that Morehouse alumni contributed to the Campaign in record-shattering numbers.

Many of the country’s largest corporations, like the Coca-Cola Co., Bank of America, JPMorgan Chase and Motorola, continued to endorse the College’s mission of educating future world leaders with multi-million-dollar donations. At a time when philanthropic dollars were carefully meted, Morehouse was still a “good investment,” said Campaign co-chair Jeffrey T. Dunn, a well-respected business consultant.

While it’s expected that alumni and long-time corporate donors will continue to support Morehouse, new friends gave added credence to the value of the Morehouse experience. Kenneth I. Chenault, chairman and CEO of American Express and one of the handful of African Americans who sit at the helm of a Fortune 500 company, knew about the Morehouse experience from a very credible source—his father, Hortenius Chenault ’34. And Julius Price, a self-educated man who because of his admiration for his Morehouse-educated pastor, DeQuincey Hentz ’96, left the College $356,000—the bulk of his life savings. Mr. Price once told a family friend that he was impressed that many of the successful black men he read about in news stories were Morehouse graduates.

Because of the generosity of our friends—old and new—President Massey’s vision of the academic village is closer than ever to realization. The Campaign for a New Century allows Morehouse to be steadfast in our mission, yet evolutionary in providing a liberal arts education that is 21st-century relevant. New and renovated facilities, an updated curriculum, the capacity to recruit and retain gifted scholars and professors, the technology and tools essential for new-millennium learning and the inculcation of spiritual and moral development in the academic experience are fueling the evolution.

All of our supporters, from those who gave by the million to those who gave in increments of time and talent, validate our mission to continue to supply Morehouse Men to our community, our nation and our world. In the end, The Campaign for a New Century allows Morehouse College to continue to give to the world well-educated men who have been inspired to lead a complicated world with a balanced blend of heart and head, skill and guts, boldness and humility.

IMPACT.
A MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES

ON BEHALF OF THE MOREHOUSE COLLEGE BOARD OF TRUSTEES, I am pleased to announce that we successfully completed The Campaign for a New Century, surpassing the $105.7-million goal and raising $118.3 million. This is a noteworthy accomplishment for an institution known worldwide for excellence and outstanding achievement. Efforts like these are what keep Morehouse in a category all its own.

The Campaign owes its phenomenal success to the support of many friends of the College, whose contributions included visionary leadership, extended volunteer hours, sacrifices from family members, and of course financial gifts of all sizes. Combined, these acts of generosity expressed a resounding vote of confidence in our shared vision of a great American institution not resting on its laurels, but pursuing ever-higher levels of distinction and service.

The impact of the Campaign is extensive. New and improved academic buildings with electronic classrooms and wireless technology labs; expanded opportunities for faculty to pursue professional renewal; more merit- and need-based scholarships to help students pay for college, improvements to the College's technological infrastructure—all have brought Morehouse closer to achieving the vibrant living and learning environment that characterizes President Walter E. Massey's vision of an academic village that reflects the spirit and intelligence of its inhabitants.

Your generous support is shaping the way we educate some of America's most promising young men and, in turn, shaping the future of America and the world.

Thank you for ushering Morehouse into this new era of excellence.
A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

WHEN I RETURNED TO MY ALMA MATER as president in August 1995, Morehouse enjoyed a worldwide reputation for academic excellence and for producing influential African American male leaders. Thanks to the stewardship of the College’s previous eight presidents—and the generous contributions of its many supporters—I inherited a solid foundation upon which to build an even stronger institution for the challenging world of the 21st century.

I returned with a vision for Morehouse.

I saw a college—already one of the best by many standards—poised to move into a new realm of institutions of higher learning. I saw an institution ready to become one of the very finest private, undergraduate liberal arts colleges in the nation—period. My vision became the College’s shared vision.

It was also crystal-clear that the dawning new century would place incredible demands on Morehouse. The College would need greater resources with which to recruit Morehouse-caliber students and faculty; significant enhancements to academic programs; and vast improvements to facilities and technology.

The Campaign for a New Century was launched in 1997 to garner the resources needed to take Morehouse to the next level of excellence.

Today, I take great pleasure in saluting the Morehouse College Board of Trustees for leadership that made the Campaign a watershed in Morehouse history. The enthusiasm, commitment of resources, and ownership of the Campaign by trustees made all the difference. Friends of Morehouse responded with unprecedented generosity, helping a great institution advance its unique mission in ways that meet the demands for a quality, 21st century education. This is—to say the least—an exhilarating way to begin a century that is sure to stretch our imaginations and test our resolve to rise continually to new challenges and opportunities.

The true winners of our momentous Campaign are the promising young men of Morehouse. Generations of students will enjoy the rich and enriching Morehouse experience and discover the power of their own possibilities.

On behalf of the College, I extend my sincerest appreciation for your contribution to the historic Campaign for a New Century. Thank you for embracing our aspirations of excellence. Thank you for helping us groom young men of intellect and character into competent, confident graduates eager to take their place and make their mark in a new century—a century that surely will need the leadership of Morehouse Men.

A MESSAGE FROM THE CAMPAIGN CO-CHAIRS

CONGRATULATIONS!

AS CO-CHAIRS FOR The Campaign for a New Century, we extend our sincere thanks to all of you, the volunteers, for your outstanding work in this historic endeavor. This effort would not have been successful had it not been for your willingness to help share the unique vision and compelling case for investing in Morehouse.

We saw close up the visionary leadership, dedication and hard work that produced these historic results. In all, more than 100 of you from all across the country helped to reach prospects and donors as never before, thereby serving a critical role in expanding the College's ability to reach such lofty targets for garnering support. Notably, your efforts helped to generate giving at historic levels for leadership, major and annual giving.

Through your dedication and commitment, the Campaign was able to create such momentum that our $105.7-million goal was reached one full year ahead of schedule, and, ultimately, led us to raise more than $118 million.

All of you have helped set the standard for the campaigns of the future. Thank you, again, for helping to build a foundation of support that will propel the College forward for years to come.

I CHOOSE MOREHOUSE

Anthony Roberts

COLLEGES ACROSS the country flooded Anthony Roberts with recruitment material and solicitations. Only a handful of the institutions, however, made Roberts’ A-list: Morehouse College, Emory University, Princeton University, Wake Forest University, University of North Carolina (UNC), Chapel Hill. All of them accepted the Richmond, VA, son of lawyers whose application for admission profiled a gifted, well-rounded student.

At Richmond’s prestigious Maggie Walker Governor’s School, a magnet school for government and international studies, Roberts excelled in advanced placement courses, participated in the Spanish Club and National Honor Society, played in the jazz band, sang in the choir. He made his mark in basketball, golf and track and field, and volunteered with Habitat for Humanity and the Salvation Army. The summer before his senior year, Roberts participated in Cornell University’s three-week Leadership Education And Development (LEAD) Summer Institute for academically talented students. “Roberts visited college campuses and pondered the intangibles. His mother had attended JPMorgan Chase in New York. His crowning achievement a 1420 SAT score (out of a possible 1600) and 4.0 grade point average.

Roberts visited college campuses and pondered the intangibles. His mother had attended law school at Emory. Morehouse had a solid reputation for producing black leaders, including Martin Luther King Jr. Princeton had big league cachet. His dad had earned an undergraduate degree at Wake Forest. Family members lived near the Chapel Hill campus of UNC.

A Presidential Scholarship

“Following a campus visit my junior year, my mom encouraged me to take a closer look at Morehouse,” Roberts recalled. “I think she believed that Morehouse would provide a nurturing environment and offer more opportunities for me to develop leadership skills.” Roberts was still undecided, however, when Sterling Hudson, Morehouse dean of Admissions and Records, came calling in late fall of Roberts’ senior year.

“Roberts, I didn’t really know what to expect,” Roberts recalled. “We had a good conversation about my academics and school activities, my family and my career aspirations. He really represented Morehouse well. But more than anything, I was impressed that the dean of admissions for the entire college would come interview me personally, at my school.”

The favorable impressions did not stop there. Morehouse later informed Roberts of his selection to compete for a full-tuition Presidential Scholarship, which he eventually earned. “It was very influential in my selection process,” Roberts said. “Having the opportunity to attend such a great school for free was very difficult to turn down. I’ll also admit there was a prestige factor that attracted me.”

Morehouse also met requirements that his school of choice be “a place where I could develop socially, mentally and physically.”

Extending the Morehouse Legacy

Predictably, as a Morehouse student, Roberts is pursuing an active, achievement-oriented lifestyle. He is parliamentarian of the Morehouse Business Association and editor-in-chief of the bi-monthly MBA Today. A sprinter on the track team, he was voted by teammates as Newcomer of the Year as a freshman. That summer, he attended campus set up by New York banks and discovered that Morehouse was well represented, along with students from Harvard, Princeton, Yale and elsewhere—proof that Morehouse “offers many opportunities for students who seek them.”

An economics major, Roberts is attracted to a career in the financial services industry. Wall Street appeals to him, yet he’s entrepreneurial minded. “I also want to have an impact on other people’s lives,” he says. “I’m definitely considering being a college professor later in my career.”

Students like Roberts highlight the potential that is unlocked when adequate resources unite Morehouse and Morehouse-caliber prospects. Said Roberts: “I accept that what I achieve and how I carry myself are not just a reflection on me, but on my family, my community and Morehouse. I can reflect that Morehouse continues to produce great leaders and great people.”

MOREHOUSE HAS BEEN SINGULARLY SUCCESSFUL IN ATTRACTION TOP-QUALITY YOUNG MEN. IT’S A SHAME FOR INDIVIDUALS SO WELL QUALIFIED AND APPLYING THEMSELVES CONSCIENTIOUSLY TO FALL BY THE WAYSIDE SIMPLY BECAUSE OF LACK OF RESOURCES. THE OPPORTUNITY FUND, UNANIMOUSLY AND ENTHUSIASTICALLY ESTABLISHED BY THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES, WILL ULTIMATELY PROVIDE ENOUGH TO MEET THE DEMONSTRATED NEEDS OF INDIVIDUALS WHO ARE IN THAT SITUATION.”

OPPORTUNITY FUND FILLS THE GAP

EMBARKING ON HIS SENIOR year with a 3.3 grade point average and advancing toward a degree in political science, Joshua Crawford was, nonetheless, gripped with anxiety. College financial aid and a part-time job simply were not generating enough money to keep up with his tuition and school fees.

“I had come too far to drop out, so I was prepared to work three or four jobs if necessary,” said the Montrose, Alabama, native.

James Stotts, the College’s director of financial aid, introduced Crawford to a more desirable option: the Opportunity Fund. Established by the Morehouse College Board of Trustees, the endowment offers assistance to third- and fourth-year students in danger of not completing their education due to lack of financial resources. For students who find themselves in that situation, the average shortfall is $5,000 to $7,000. In its first two years, the Opportunity Fund provided scholarships totalling $504,000 to more than 120 students.

“It’s been a tremendous help for students trying to close the gap in meeting the direct costs of college,” said Stotts. “These students are on that last mile to graduation. It means so much that the College is able to help. It makes a statement to the students that ‘we are here to assist you.’”

Because financial difficulty is a primary reason students drop out of Morehouse, “the Opportunity Fund has the potential to improve the College’s graduation rate,” Stotts said.

Crawford was awarded a $6,000 scholarship. “It definitely helped me in terms of having the financial ability to stay at Morehouse, but also in not having to take on even more debt,” said Crawford, who plans to attend law school.

“This was really a golden opportunity for me, and I feel blessed. I will still have to work some, but not as much, which allows me to concentrate more on my studies. It’s lifted huge pressure off me.”

Morehouse College is a sanctuary in the dearth that is the current black male education landscape. Everybody feels it. The visiting executive who fields tough questions about his company from our business students. The Commencement speaker who invariably comments on the endless queue of black male graduates. And even our freshmen, who, upon their arrival, find it refreshing to find there are many who are just like them.

Joining the Morehouse brotherhood can be a potent attraction all its own. Many prospective students yearn to join a membership that includes Martin Luther King Jr., Shelton "Spike" Lee, Maynard Jackson, David Satcher, Samuel L. Jackson, Louis Sullivan, Edwin Moses, and many more.

But, the truth is, when it comes down to making the final decision about which college to attend, for most students, the bottom line is finances. Our legacy may attract them, but scholarship funds seal the deal. In order for Morehouse to continue to recruit the best students, especially in these challenging economic times, the College must offer competitive financial incentives.

Nearly a third of The Campaign for a New Century’s goal was allotted to attracting and investing in the best students, a strong indication of how vital it is to support student scholarship. Further evidence is a new scholarship, the Opportunity Fund, established by the Morehouse College Board of Trustees as a stopgap resource for upperclassmen who need financial assistance to finish college.

The Campaign for a New Century allows the College to stand with some of the top learning institutions in the nation in the fierce competition to attract some of the best minds of the 21st century.

ON THE LEADING EDGE

WALTER EARL FLUKER has yet to fulfill his lifelong ambition to pastor a church, but that has not stopped him from preaching. A preferred topic: ethical leadership as antidote to complex issues of the 21st century.

The troubles of the world, Fluker warns, are increasingly linked to growing conflict between systems worlds, those vast impersonal systems dictated by power and money (politics and economics), and lifeworlds, the commonplace, everyday traffic of life where citizens meet and greet one another, where common values and beliefs about order and the world are held.

According to Fluker, “this is where the real battle will be waged for the soul of America and the world.”

Fluker’s pulpit, for now, is the 12-year-old Leadership Center at Morehouse College (LCMC), where he has served as executive director since 1998. In 2003, during The Campaign for a New Century, the Coca-Cola Foundation donated $3 million to the Center, $1.5 million of which endowed Fluker as the Coca-Cola Professor of Leadership Studies.

“The endowed chair anchors the leadership studies program,” Fluker said. “It takes care of my salary and frees up other resources for the College. It also allows me to teach and care of my salary and frees up other resources for the College. It also allows me to teach and gives me a certain mobility.”

Hope and Possibility

Under Fluker’s direction, the Center has developed into a preeminent academic center for the study and practice of ethical leadership in national and global venues. With an array of educational, research and training programs, the Center’s focus is developing leaders at Morehouse. The Center offers a moral leadership and African American leadership studies program, “Fluker said. “It takes care of my salary and frees up other resources for the College. It also allows me to teach and gives me a certain mobility.”

Fluker became enamored of ethical leadership in the 1990s while researching a book on ethical leadership from the black church tradition. The more he learned, the more his fascination grew. He encourages students to develop a similar appetite for reading, research, travel—learning. “Some of them take me on,” he said. “Students are normally hungry or else they don’t come and see me.”

Fluker holds a doctorate in social ethics from Boston University, a master of divinity degree from Garrett-Evangelical Seminary and a bachelor’s degree in philosophy and biblical studies from Trinity College. His prior academic experience includes professorial and administrative positions at Vanderbilt University, Harvard College, Dillard University and Garvey-Rochester Divinity School.

However, he reminds his students that intellectual brilliance is not enough. “We want students to be smart,” he said, “but we also want good human beings who are leaders. Our society needs that, and our world needs that.”

A CHAIR FOR DAD

KENNETH L. CHENAULT, chairman and CEO of American Express, pledged $1 million to the Campaign to establish an endowed chair in the Division of Science and Mathematics. The chair will be named in honor of his father, Hortenius Chenault, who graduated from Morehouse with honors in 1934 and from Howard University’s College of Dentistry in 1939. He then passed the New York state dental licensing exam with the highest score recorded to date, and went on to practice dentistry until 1987 in Hampstead, N.Y. Hortenius Chenault died in 1990 at the age of 80.

Ken Chenault, who is one of the first African American CEOs of a Fortune 500 company, admired his father’s determination. During World War II, the elder Chenault enlisted in the Army, but segregation blocked his path into the multinational Allied Dental Corps. Undaunted, he befriended a group of foreign officers and entered the corps through an international arm. “He overcame every possible type of obstacle,” Ken Chenault said in a “Nowday article.

FROM BARREN TO BREATHTAKING

WHEN HERMAN “SKIP” MASON JR. was named director of the Morehouse Knowledge Resource Center (LRC) in late 2003, he discovered “a great facility that was understated and underserved. There were lots of empty bookshelves and the building’s walls were bare.” But to Mason, a barren wall was like an artist’s canvas. “I saw an opportunity to create,” he said.

Mason had transformed the LRC’s sterile environment into an engaging exhibit space—“an atmosphere of inspiration.” Hanging on the walls and displayed throughout the landmark rotunda were more than 100 pictures and artifacts of the College’s rich history.

Storytelling is Mason’s forte. A noted historian who also serves as College archivist, Mason discovered in his new position a unique opportunity: “I’ve been archivist, I could merge the history of the College with the goals and mission of the Learning Resource Center. What may have appeared to be an unnatural fit actually turned out to be just right in terms of creating the atmosphere I wanted.”

A gift from Morehouse alumnus Edward J. Roberts ’38 and his wife, Hermese, endowed Mason’s position. An $825,000 bequest from the estate of the Morehouse graduate enabled the College to complete a $1-million match from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, establishing the Edward and Hermese Roberts Learning Resource Center Endowed Directorship.

Mason takes special pride in the center’s culturally stimulating programs, believing “you can’t overdose programming that will encourage students to reach beyond their current horizons.”

As for the center’s ambiance, “I sometimes catch students sitting there gazing at the pictures. To me, that says I am accomplishing what I had hoped— to have students come here and be inspired to learn.”

Ask a Morehouse graduate about the people who influenced him, and no doubt he will name several Morehouse professors. Filmmaker Shelton “Spike” Lee recalls how the red pen of English professor Delores Stephens bled on many of his papers, but credits her with making him a better writer. Keith Hollingsworth, associate economics professor, spent a summer in an African bungalow with no electricity and plumbing so that he could work side by side with six of his students to build a fence around a school—and teach his students the virtue of self-sacrifice for common good.

The hallmark of any great institution is the quality of instruction and level of commitment from its faculty. If Morehouse College is to become one of the finest liberal arts colleges in the nation, then it must continue to attract and keep professors like Drs. Stephens and Hollingsworth.

The Campaign for a New Century rewards the faculty’s scholarly ambition and achievement by boosting development resources that support scholarly research, publication and participation in educational conferences, as well as by providing tools for 21st-century teaching such as “smart” classrooms and wireless access. Campaign dollars also created three prestigious endowed faculty chairs for the Morehouse College Leadership Center, the Learning Resource Center and the Division of Humanities.

SMART MOVE

ASK STUDENTS AND FACULTY in the Division of Business Administration and Economics about the impact of the division’s location in the College’s new Leadership Center building, and they all talk about the amazing space.

Leadership and Professional Development (LPD) seminars, which help students develop everything from presentation skills to business etiquette, now take place in the state-of-the-art confines of the Leadership Center building’s Georgia-Pacific Auditorium, a contemporary, 311-plus-seat lecture hall with advanced audiovisual equipment that includes a ceiling-mounted projection screen and a “smart” podium. In fact, technology features throughout the facility make the 70,000-square-foot building a 21st century wonder.

“The impact on us is monumental,” said John E. Williams, division dean and Mills Lane professor of finance. “Given the quality of business school this is perceived to be, the quality of faculty we want to attract, and the level of firms that come here to recruit, there is a required business culture and environment. We now have a facility that reflects that culture, which begins with having a ‘smart’ building.”

The Leadership Center building officially opened at the beginning of the 2005-06 academic year. In addition to the Division of Business Administration and Economics, the four-story campus landmark houses The Leadership Center at Morehouse College, functioning as a global laboratory that addresses the increasing need for ethical leadership in a broad range of academic, community, governmental and business environments.

Also headquartered in the facility are the Bonner Office of Community Service, International Affairs.

Global Collaborations

The building’s computer and information technology promote collaboration among students, faculty, administration and staff, as well as creates classrooms without borders. Students can sit in a lecture room in Atlanta and have discussions with a world leader thousands of miles away. Users can access information in a wireless Internet lab then manipulate it from a networked computer workstation.

“I like that the business school has an Internet lab that allows us to do our research projects among other business students, and that faculty have more private space for consultation with students,” said Kyle Gates, a junior.

Instructors using multimedia boards, or “smart” boards, in the lecture rooms can digitally capture, recall and project their written notes. The facility also has a Conference Center capable of accommodating up to 500 guests in a formal banquet setting.

“We are light years into the future—it’s phenomenal!” said Benjamin P. McLaurein, the division’s director of career services. He noted that in spring 2006, for the first time in many years, the business school’s annual E.B. Williams Awards Banquet accommodated students, faculty and corporate representatives not at a downtown hotel, but on campus—in the Conference Center of the Leadership Center building.

Competitive Edge

“We are very fortunate,” said Williams. “Our students compete with students from some of the best schools in the country, and they have to be trained comparably. Smart classrooms, for example, make a difference to us. It is necessary to go online and find out what the market is doing right now, real-time. With access to this kind of contemporary technology, our students can leave here and go to Wall Street—as so many of them do—and not be intimidated by that environment.”

“Of the 150 to 175 students the division graduates annually, a large percentage end up at financial institutions such as JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup, Goldman Sachs and Merrill Lynch. Likewise, Williams said, “when corporate representatives from multi-national corporations come here as our guests, they shouldn’t have to feel they are out of their element. We should be able to match their business culture, at least to the extent that higher education is able to do so. In this facility, we can comfortably accommodate our visitors.”

SUITE RECOGNITION

WHEN THE REV. DR. OTIS MOSS JR. ’56 WAS A STUDENT at Morehouse, finances were tight. In his sophomore year, he recalls receiving two letters one day. The first was from the Morehouse Business Office asking him to move off campus because he had failed to pay his room and board fees.

The second letter was from a church in Detroit where he had earlier served as a summer volunteer. It contained the seeds of his faith.

“It had a check sufficient enough to take care of my bills for the rest of the school year,” said Moss.

“The pastor of the church had written ‘I don’t want you to ever stop your education for lack of money.’”

“I learned in literal fashion that God does move in mysterious ways.”

A half century later on May 12, 2006, Moss became one of a handful of people to have a building named in his honor on the Morehouse campus.

The Otis Moss Jr. Residential Suites is a sprawling residential complex consisting of two buildings, 375 beds, and units of one- and three-bedroom suites and apartments (which include living areas and full kitchens). With its computer labs, convenient laundry facilities, and meditation and study rooms, Moss said that, if he were a 21st century student, it would be where he would want to reside on campus.

The fact that Moss’s name will reside permanently on the residential complex speaks volumes about a legacy of service that is already set in stone.

“We are better able to provide the facilities that complement the quality of teaching taking place in our classrooms. We also have a greater opportunity to accentuate the historic character of this institution.”

—Andre E. Bertrand ’76
Vice President for Campus Operations
Every third Thursday in August, the parents of nearly 800 Morehouse freshmen entrust their sons to Morehouse, a school that many of them eagerly endorsed as perhaps the only institution in this nation that will guide their sons’ transformation into a scholar who is also a doer, a leader who is also a servant.

Parents aren’t the only ones who carefully select Morehouse. Many of the young scholars themselves, as well as professors, administrators and staff, choose Morehouse over many of the nation’s most prestigious institutions.

President Walter E. Massey ’58 shared his vision for the ideal environment for this community of selective academicians: the academic village—a place that reflects the intellectual, emotional and moral development of its inhabitants. Everything from teaching to technology, from facilities to even the flowerbeds should reflect the College’s mission of excellence.

The Campaign’s most physically towering success, the Leadership Center facility, best exemplifies the inherent synergy between space and pursuit. The building is home to the Division of Business Administration and Economics, whose mission is to produce astute businessmen who lead with their heads and their hearts, as well as several programs that focus on community involvement and ethical leadership training.

The Campaign for a New Century built the academic village.
Accountable, Outcome-Based Education

The Wall Street Journal listed Morehouse as a top feeder school for the nation’s most elite professional and graduate programs.
“CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT LOOMS LARGE FOR THE COLLEGE. IT ALLOWS US TO KEEP ABRACKET OF NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN HIGHER EDUCATION, CAPTURE THE BEST PRACTICES, AND APPLY THEM WHERE POSSIBLE.”

— David V. Taylor
Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs
21ST CENTURY CURRICULUM

A SELECT 150 FRESHMEN entering Morehouse in fall 2006 embarked on a path that was new even to Morehouse: the trial of a revised core curriculum for the College.

The pilot is the first extensive evaluation of the College’s core curriculum, or general education program, since the 1970s, said Hazel Arnett Ervin, director of the General Education Program. Core curriculum generally refers to coursework not related to a student’s major that all newly admitted students must take. Supported by The Campaign for a New Century, Morehouse’s three-year pilot (2006-2009) is helping the College assess and strengthen student learning.

“This was something the College needed,” said Ervin. “It also comes at a time when there is a national push for greater accountability in higher education. The pilot allows us to address the issue of accountability and bring the College into the 21st century.”

Age of Accountability

A 2002 report of the Association of American Colleges and Universities (AACU), of which Morehouse is a member, declared that students must be prepared to thrive in a “knowledge-intensive economy,” “globally engaged democracy” and “technological society where innovation is key to progress and success.”

“It is not enough,” Ervin said, “to point to a few, or even many, student success stories and say, ‘see, success is happening at our school.’ The questions are: Is success happening consistently among our students? How do we know that each student has mastered each particular skill that we want out students to master? Do we understand how we are achieving these outcomes?”

Freshman Julian Wilson and his parents were favorably impressed with the makeover concept. “I think just the fact that Morehouse was making changes to improve its curriculum was what made us agree to my participation in the pilot,” said Wilson, an Atlanta native who is working toward a dual degree in applied physics and mechanical engineering. “My parents wanted me to get the best education possible.”

Measuring Up

Both the pilot and current curriculum share the same goals and student learning outcomes of the General Education, or core, curriculum apply to the pilot and to the College’s current core curriculum. However, the pilot introduces a new model of student development, depending largely on student-centered, outcome-based learning with quantitative and qualitative measures of achievement. Before advancing to their majors, students in the pilot are required to demonstrate proficiencies in English, math and critical thinking.

“The labs and co-curricular activities” said Wilson, “basically reaffirm what we learn in class, but they also give us an opportunity to clarify material that was covered.” Wilson, who is strong in math, welcomes the English lab. “It’s definitely straight forward in telling you where you are and where you need help.”

On the flip side of the coin is Melvin Colbert, a marketing major from Fort Washington, Md., who appreciates how the math lab has strengthened his skills.

“The student knows at all times how he is progressing,” said Ervin. Systematic and ongoing assessment and evaluations point out difficulties and the necessary corrective measures.

“I feel very comfortable with it,” Michael Rawlings of Dallas said of his participation in the pilot. “Morehouse wants to stay up with the times and find the best ways to educate us.”

HEALTHY DOSE OF REALITY

SCIENTISTS AND PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICIALS who study community health issues often take a detached, scientific approach that fails to engage community residents. Using this method, the investigators sometimes overlook social factors influencing community wellness. A $4-million grant by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation is helping Morehouse College researchers develop a radically different research model.

The grant funds a five-year health disparities project by the Morehouse College Research Center on Health Disparities, in partnership with other educational institutions, called “Health Disparities, Ethics, and Participation: New Tools and New Visions.” Diane Rowley, the center’s director, and Bill Jenkins, the center’s associate director and research associate professor of science and mathematics, lead Morehouse in developing a community-centered model for eliminating disparities in health status by targeting the major social factors that cause disease and by offering community residents a stronger voice in determining what will be studied in the project.

“I think one of the problems is we assume healthcare is about access,” Rowley said. “We need to look at the social determinants of health—racism, socioeconomic status, education, cultural difference—that are not looked at by the medical community. If those root causes are addressed, we can develop healthy communities.”

The project also hopes to capitalize on the relationship that Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) have with the community.

“We see HBCUs as part of the community,” Rowley said. “We have always been there to solve problems. The key is that the new approach is using students and faculties from HBCUs to capitalize on the relationship.”

The Healthcare Georgia Foundation and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention provided some funding for the pilot phase of the project.
Students today live in a world dramatically different from the one their fathers and grandfathers encountered. Information from anywhere on the globe can be accessed instantaneously; issues that originate overseas often land in our own backyards; trends in everything from finances to fashion blaze worldwide trails.

Still, the founding mission of Morehouse College is just as relevant today as it was 140 years ago: to produce African American leaders for their communities, the nation and the world. The ageless wisdom of a mission conceived in the 19th century keeps us focused on our commitment to develop intellectually, socially and morally centered citizens for the 21st century.

The Campaign for a New Century allowed the College to revise its core curriculum. The process, which began with a three-year pilot that will help the College assess and strengthen student learning, ensures that our 21st century scholars will be able to successfully negotiate a more global, knowledge-intensive, technological society.

The Campaign for a New Century was an exhilarating milestone of a continuous journey. The realities of our ever-changing global economy—and the ambitious vision Morehouse has established for itself—drive our ongoing efforts to recreate and sustain a state-of-the-art environment that optimizes student learning.

The Campaign for a New Century did not end with the success of the Campaign for a New Century. Rather, the Campaign was an exhilarating milestone of a continuous journey. The realities of our ever-changing global economy—and the ambitious vision Morehouse has established for itself—drive our ongoing efforts to recreate and sustain a state-of-the-art environment that optimizes student learning.

THE TECHNOLOGY

Technology is the reality of today and the opportunity of tomorrow.

Technology has astonishing capabilities to open pathways to vast worlds of information and ideas, to help students learn and practice 21st century skills, to provide administrators with data analysis and assessment tools that lead to more informed decision-making, and to connect the College to educational partners at other universities and in the business community. These are just a few of the applications that inform the College’s commitment to achieving excellence in technology.

Donor support for the technology initiative of The Campaign for a New Century and the generous investments of corporations and foundations have funded significant improvements to the College’s technological infrastructure in recent years—including, for example, construction of the John H. Hopps Jr. Technology Tower, wiring of the campus and outfitting for wireless capabilities at several campus locations.

Our vision—in fact, our responsibility—is to do much more. An explosion of possibilities for technology-based teaching and learning, as well as our increasingly technologically sophisticated students, demand that we aggressively invest in and continually expand the College’s technological infrastructure. Among other things, we seek to create universal electronic classrooms, to enhance the video and network server for distance learning, and to develop faculty for teaching in technology. Support for this initiative would strengthen Morehouse’s ability to keep pace with rapid global changes in technology, as well as advance the College’s emergence as an innovator in educational technology.

Joan Sawyer (standing), associate professor of computer science, and Nedra M. Mahone, an instructor in the Division of Business and Economics, receive TTP training.
EACH YEAR WITHOUT FAIL, scores of multi-national corporations visit Morehouse to recruit students in the Division of Business Administration and Economics. The persistent interest in Morehouse students by the corporate community and the division’s 90-percent graduate placement rate reflect the division’s well-earned reputation for preparing students, through an outstanding curriculum and innovative co-curricula activities, for corporate success.

Stiff competition from other institutions for top faculty makes it imperative for the College to demonstrate its commitment to retaining well-respected, high-achieving scholars for critical leadership positions. To that end, a major priority for Morehouse is to fund an endowed chair for the dean of the Division of Business Administration and Economics. Sponsorship of the endowed chair would give Morehouse a competitive edge, offering recognition for persons of exceptional academic distinction and providing stable funding for a position that is key to the division’s continued success.

ON JUNE 23, 2006, Morehouse College became the owner of one of the greatest American archives of the 20th century. This monumental collection is noteworthy because it contains 10,000 items dating from 1946 to 1968, and includes handwritten drafts of Dr. King’s famous speeches and writings, including his “I Have a Dream” speech and his Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech.

With the honor of bringing the King Collection “home” to Morehouse comes the responsibilities of stewardship of this national treasure. The College is seeking $1.5 million to ensure that the Collection is professionally archived and appropriately exhibited—a process that includes sorting, arranging and describing pieces, repairing and conserving items and digitizing material. Benefactors of the project would support the College in promoting insight into the thoughts of one of America’s greatest leaders and in offering Morehouse students new avenues of inquiry and discovery about a man who once sat where they sit today.
LEARNING RESOURCE CENTER

CONSISTENT WITH THE VISION of creating a multidimensional academic village is the College’s commitment to providing the kind of state-of-the-art physical facilities that are part and parcel of a 21st century educational experience. Such facilities should include a modern learning resource center specifically designed and equipped for today’s students and faculty and the resources they require.

The current Learning Resource Center—which serves as the College’s principal on-campus study facility and as the electronic link to the Robert W. Woodruff Library of the Atlanta University Center—is undersized and under-equipped to handle the growing demands placed on it by our young scholars. The College seeks funding for construction of a learning resource center that would sustain the highest standards of quality in instructional support, including computer labs, media technology, listening/viewing stations, multimedia production equipment, and enhanced learning and information services. Donors to this initiative would assist the College in providing an environment that helps the modern student tap his full potential.

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE CENTER FOR THE ARTS

THE PROPOSED Morehouse College Center for the Arts, which includes the Ray Charles Performing Arts Center and Morehouse Music Education Building, is further evidence of the College’s commitment to enhance the study of the arts in its world-class liberal arts education. The completion of the $20-million, 76,000-square-foot facility is a top priority for the College. Creating an attractive gateway to the campus’s south entrance, the Center will provide a much-needed cultural venue in the historic West End community and augment College initiatives in community revitalization and arts programming.

To date, a total of $10 million in gifts and pledges has been raised for the project’s Ray Charles Performing Arts Center, a 575-seat concert hall that also will accommodate musical and theatrical performances. Significant contributions include a $2-million donation by Ray Charles; a $1-million gift from Joe Adams, longtime manager of Ray Charles Enterprises and a major supporter of Morehouse; a donation of $500,000 by David Geffen, co-founder of DreamWorks, to fund a digital music library; and a fundraiser in Charles’ honor that raised $670,000. Support for the Center would materially enhance Morehouse College’s legacy of leadership in the arts.

MESSAGE FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR INSTITUTIONAL ADVANCEMENT

FROM ITS FOUNDING, Morehouse has been a place built upon great expectations. The Campaign for a New Century was no different. We had all of the essential ingredients for a successful campaign: a clear vision for the institution, committed leadership, and alumni, friends and partners who believed in the great promise Morehouse presents to our global community.

The Campaign’s success is a victory won by the people and institutions who saw the need to invest in the glorious enterprise known as Morehouse as never before: you, our donors. It is your commitment that fueled record-setting giving in such areas as million-dollar gifts, major gifts and overall alumni participation. These historic achievements will not only benefit the community of faculty, staff and students who live, work and learn at Morehouse, but our global neighbors, as well—because the world still values and needs the transformative leadership of Morehouse men.

The faculty, staff and the Office of Institutional Advancement team worked tirelessly to help achieve major Campaign initiatives, which now form a solid foundation for future fundraising endeavors.

Thank you to all of our donors for investing in the future of one of the nation’s most important learning institutions. The success of the Campaign validates Morehouse as a national treasure and creates a great platform for the College’s continued growth.

Thank you, again, to each of you for investing in Morehouse College.

Arthur McClung Jr. ’66 Honored as a Morehouse Major Donor by Kresge Foundation HBCU Initiative

Ask Arthur J. McClung Jr. ’66 why he would give $187,500 to Morehouse College and he can’t stop telling the reasons.

The dorm room where he met Al Byrd ’66, his best friend. The chapel where he was inspired by then-president Benjamin E. Mays. The decision he made to join the civil rights movement.

But, more than anything, Morehouse is the place where McClung, director of the city of Atlanta operations for Georgia Power, learned to think with both his head and heart — qualities that have brought success in both his career and personal life.

Those qualities are also what compelled President Walter E. Massey ’58 to recommend McClung to the Kresge Foundation HBCU Initiative, which works with Historically Black Colleges and Universities to strengthen their development offices and increase giving from alumni and other donors.

McClung and 29 other HBCU alumni donors from various institutions were honored in May 2004 for giving to Historically Black Colleges and Universities during Kresge’s fourth annual Donor’s Reception. Combined, they gave $11.7 million to their alma maters.

“We were taught to give back with our time, with our talents and our resources, and I’m being an obedient son of Morehouse,” said McClung. “This is something I’ve given out of my heart and I’m not sure what should really be expected. It’s very difficult for me to talk about being recognized for doing what’s right, and this is the right thing to do.”

McClung, an alumni committee member for The Campaign for a New Century, also gave the College invaluable inroads into untapped resources that reached into well-heeled circles.

McClung created a book scholarship in honor of his mother, Helen C. McClung, to go to the King Chapel assistant who, like his mother, demonstrates the “greatest degree of kindness and gentleness.”

McClung says he is practicing what he remembers Mays telling him and other students, citing a quote from Martin Luther King Jr. ’48: “All men are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly. I can never be what I ought to be until you are what you ought to be, and you can never be what you ought to be until I am what I ought to be.”

According to school records, McClung began giving in February 1990, starting with a $86.42 check he gave to the school’s athletic programs. Since then, he’s given thousands of dollars to scholarships, the Annual Fund, special projects and the Campaign. He also helped in building the Howard Thurman Carillon Tower and the Benjamin E. Mays Memorial.

Kresge spokeswoman TaRessa Stovall notes that McClung’s level in giving is one indicator of an upsweep in the number and amount of donations being given to HBCUs by their alumni. African American graduates are becoming more affluent and, as a result, have deeper pockets — and the investment savvy — to give money to their schools in ways white alumni have done for some time: through wills, stock market investments, monthly deductions and estate planning.

McClung has donated a total of $100,000 to The Campaign for a New Century. That dedication and adherence to the belief that making a difference is the most important legacy that he can leave is what has made McClung, who calls his support the work of an “obedient son,” a no-brainer for the Kresge honor.

“Art has been one of our most committed alumni, both in the spirit of his commitment and his support,” said Phillip Howard ’87, vice president for Institutional Advancement at Morehouse. “He’s been willing to be a great advocate for the College.”

My Brother’s Keeper

When Rufus Rivers came of age, he considered serving his country in the military. Due to poor vision, that goal was unfulfilled. With only average high school grades, Rivers did not seriously consider college, although he took the SAT. However, fate was weaving another tapestry for the service-minded New York native.

“I received a letter from Morehouse that said, based on my SAT scores, if I came and participated in the Pre-med Summer Program and did well, I would be admitted to the College,” said Rivers, who received a $500 stipend to attend the program. “As they say, the rest is history.”

Achieving his unexpected dream of a college education, Rivers graduated from Morehouse in 1986 with a degree in business. He went on to earn an MBA from the J.L. Kellogg Graduate School of Management at Northwestern University. Today, he is a managing director with The Carlyle Group in New York City.

Rivers shares his personal success. In the past year, he has given more than $20,000 to his alma mater and has committed an additional $100,000 to The Campaign for a New Century. At age 38, he was one of the youngest donors to make a commitment at this level.

“I don’t view what I have committed to the College as giving anything,” said Rivers, who credits Morehouse with helping him strengthen his self-confidence. “All I am trying to do is repay the debt I owe, knowing that debt can never really be fully repaid. I just have to continue to give of my time and resources and hope that others do the same.”

The New Jersey resident says he feels blessed to have the financial resources to make such a contribution. In addition, he is glad he understands how important it is to make financial contributions to institutions of higher education.

Rivers recalls his freshman year at Morehouse when he met others whom he describes as more intelligent and with better grades than his, but who did not come back for their sophomore year.

“Some of those fellow students probably never had the opportunity to finish college, largely due to a lack of money,” Rivers said. “So, whatever I can do to give someone an opportunity to get a college education is something I feel obligated to do.”

Chemistry Department Receives $400,000 Gift From W.M. Keck Foundation

Behind a nondescript door on the third floor of Merrill Hall is a goldmine of hi-tech equipment: microscopes, spectrometers, a centrifuge and a refrigerator; machines that purify water and sense acidity levels; computers for molecular modeling and simulations; sensors to perform experiments and detect compounds; and other instruments of various sizes, shapes and uses. In 2005, W.M. Keck Foundation gave the chemistry department a $400,000 gift, which was used in part to finance the new $218,000 biochemistry lab. The remaining money has enabled the department to hire additional faculty and to update the general chemistry and organic chemistry laboratories.

The gift will help gain national accreditation for the College's Chemistry Department.

When the Corella & Bertram F. Bonner Foundation donated $4.5 million to the Morehouse College Bonner Scholarship Program in 2005, the affect was more than the improvement of programming and operations—it was an enhancement to the College’s very culture.

President Walter E. Massey ’58, who’s vision for the College embraces the ideal of community service in building an academic village, has been the visionary behind building leadership through civic responsibility—which sits squarely on the College’s foundation of producing academically prepared, ethical leaders.

But the credit for providing the College with a how-to blueprint for “institutionalizing community service” goes directly to the Bonner Foundation, said Jacqueline Miles-Johnson, director of the Morehouse Bonner Program.

To reflect the enhanced emphasis in community service, the program was renamed the Bonner Office of Community Service, which shows the Bonner Foundation that Morehouse is “very much concerned with having a culture of service,” said Hasan Crockett, director of the Office of Community Service.

Additionally, the Office of Community Service was moved from under Campus Operations and Administrative Services to its current home under the Office of Academic Affairs, headed by provost and senior vice president David V. Taylor. The move gives it a direct line to the administration, which plugs into the College’s mission to create servant-leaders.

“The College committed itself to a campus-wide office of community service, and [has made] a serious commitment toward service learning and civic engagement,” said Crockett.

The office also launched a website (www.morehouse.edu/ocs) alongside an online management system that tracks student community service hours with the 50-plus non-profit organizations the Office of Community Service partners with throughout the year.

The office also is working on a grant proposal that will allow students to conduct research on how service-learning and community service can combat depression and ensure good mental health for college-age black men.

But Crockett, for one, wants students to go beyond community service and deal with the policies that have an impact on their communities.

“Students should not only [perform] community service, they should also develop skills that allow them to have an impact on public policy,” he said. “We work in soup kitchens, we work in schools, but the primary reason [the indigent] are in the condition they’re in is because of public policy [decisions].”
Morehouse is growing into leaders for tomorrow’s society, a society that will have an ongoing need for great leadership,” said Tooker. “I just think all of us who have been fortunate in our lives need to do all we can to help young people.”

Tooker, a retired vice chairman and former chief executive officer of Motorola, also gives his time by serving on several other boards. His commitment to help young people, coupled with his desire to diversify Motorola, caught the eye and interest of one of the company’s board members, Morehouse President Walter E. Massey, who convinced him to join the Morehouse Board of Trustees since 1998, Tooker considers it both an honor and obligation for his family to contribute to the Morehouse legacy.

“We are very much aware of the examples of fine young men that Morehouse is growing into leaders for tomorrow’s society, a society that will have an ongoing need for great leadership,” said Tooker. “I just think all of us who have been fortunate in our lives need to do all we can to help young people.”

In 1999, under Tooker’s leadership, the Motorola Foundation announced a $1-million gift to help construct the state-of-the-art Leadership Center at Morehouse. The gift was the Foundation’s largest contribution ever to a Historically Black College or University.

Consummate contributors to educational institutions, the Tookers previously funded endowed scholarships at a preschool for at-risk children in the Phoenix area and established a Medallion of Merit scholarship at their alma mater, North Phoenix High School. They also established scholarships at their other alma mater, the colleges of engineering and education at Arizona State University, where they first met.

“The focus of our giving throughout our married life has been on education and young people,” said Gary Tooker about the couple’s philanthropy. “Giving toward education has just been part of our lives.”

Building on a Solid Foundation

It is understandable that Atlanta contractor C. David Moody Jr., the man behind the construction of several Morehouse buildings, including the Leadership Center facility and the upcoming Ray Charles Performing Arts Center, would use building metaphors when talking about why he pledged $1 million to The Campaign for a New Century.

"Morehouse gave me the foundation—the basics, the courage and leadership skills I needed to succeed," says Moody, owner of the hugely successful C.D. Moody Construction Company.

Moody graduated from Morehouse in 1978 with a degree in psychology, and later earned the bachelor’s of architecture, a five-year professional degree, from Howard University. After graduating from Howard in 1981, he worked as an architect in the nuclear power department at Bechtel, Inc., in its Ann Arbor, Michigan, office for two and a half years before returning to Atlanta, where he worked as a project manager for several small companies.

He founded C.D. Moody Construction Company in 1987, finding work initially as a joint venture/general contractor in the City of Atlanta’s minority business program. Contracting projects grew exponentially, as did his reputation for good work, in and out of government. Some of the company’s notable projects include Philips Arena, the Federal Reserve Bank, Turner Field, Big Bethel Baptist Church and even Disney World in Orlando, Fla. The new residence hall, parking deck, Merrill Hall/Hopps Technology Tower are among the other facilities his company has completed on the Morehouse campus.

Moody first contributed to the Campaign for a New Century with a $100,000 cash donation, which earned him the prestigious "Captain’s Chair" during a Key Supporters Reception. Shoring up his commitment to his alma mater, he also endowed the College’s Diamond in the Rough Scholarship with $15,000. "It’s for students who might be mid-C students with a lot of potential,” Moody said. “They’re like I was.”

He readily admits that his munificence was influenced by the tradition of alumni from predominately white colleges donating generously to their institutions. He witnessed this practice up close while growing up in Michigan, where his now retired father was a vice provost at the University of Michigan. But he also

Although it has been 31 years since Julius Hollis ’72 walked the Morehouse campus as an aspiring business major, his connection to the College is perhaps stronger now than at any other point in his life.

Like so many of his fellow graduates, Hollis is forever in debt to Morehouse for helping him fulfill his dreams. This is the driving force behind his persistence in seeing his alma mater continue to flourish in the 21st century.

“Morehouse gave me the greatest foundation to dream, soar and achieve,” said Hollis. “It gave me the confidence to apply the principles of Dr. Mays and Dr. King and become a global entrepreneur.”

Since 1984, Hollis has served as CEO of Hollis & Company, an investment-counseling firm headquartered in Atlanta and with an office in Johannesburg, South Africa. The company has provided financial services for a variety of clients, including Cabot LNG, The Cheesecake Factory Restaurants, Inc., The Coca-Cola Company, Georgia-Pacific Corporation, JPMorgan Chase and Mirant, Inc. In addition to these companies, the firm works closely with the governments of Barbados, Jamaica and Trinidad.

Through his wide range of business contacts, Hollis has been able to promote the College to various potential donors both in the United States and overseas. To help create an awareness of the College and its mission, Hollis and his wife, Jeanne, sponsored a dinner at the Four Seasons Hotel in celebration of Hollis’ long-time friend Clarence Avant, who received an honorary doctoral degree from Morehouse in 2003.

The gala affair became a springboard for funding. Hollis presented President Walter E. Massey ’58 with a $20,000 check in support of The Campaign for a New Century—matching his previous gift of $20,000 from 2001.

“I want to help Morehouse find strategic contributors and corporate contributors to provide capital for the endowment,” said Hollis.

A Shiny, New Pledge

You hear it all the time from recent college grads. After they land that “good job” (you know, the one on Wall Street or Corporate Lane), one of their first purchases will be a shiny, new car. Some opt for a speedy, sporty deal. Others go for the sleek, luxurious type.

F. Euclid Walker ’94 chose neither. Walker reasoned that the large outlay of cash dumped into an investment that loses value the moment you pull out of the lot could be much better spent on driving up the number of young men who successfully complete their education at Morehouse. So, instead of buying a sporty new car, Walker pledged $100,000, to The Campaign for a New Century. The pledge has him cruising into the annals of alumni giving as the youngest major donor in the College’s history.

Walker is hoping his pledge will rev up alumni support for the College. “I’m trying to be an example to other young alums,” he said. “Black colleges are often at a disadvantage in terms of endowments, so we need to change the perception that you need to make it before you can give. There’s a lot you can do right now.”

By most standards, Walker has indeed made it. After graduating from Morehouse with a degree in business administration, he joined Morgan Stanley in the firm’s New York office, where he was involved with executing a variety of transactions, including capital raisings. Two years later he moved to London to serve as the operations officer of the firm’s banking department for Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

These days, Walker is based in Chicago and is managing director and founder of Renascent Capital Group. Without the slightest hesitation, he attributes his success to his alma mater: “Outside of my family, Morehouse has done more for me than anyone else. While at Morehouse I developed bonds of brotherhood, and I had a group of peer mentors who pushed me to be all that I can be.”

Walker said the decision to become a major donor was made during a spiritual journey to the cradle of civilization. While traveling through Israel, Jordan and Egypt, he realized that he wanted to do something important for his “home away from home.”

Although his donation has historical significance, Walker wants to make it clear that the amount that you give is not nearly as important as the fact that you give.

“At this time, everyone may not be able to give $10,000 or $20,000,” he said. “But if we merely increase the amount of people giving a little bit, we can change not only Morehouse, but the world.”
